SALE OF $12,300,000 BONDS BEFORE NEW OFFICIALS

OUTGOING BODY COMPLETES DEAL FOR BOND SALE

Raises Interest Rate Upon Real Estate Bonds Sold at Par to Six Per Cent

BOND SALE COST TOTALLED

Bills Filed Bringing Total Cost to $130,000; Paddock Resigns Place

NEW ISSUE RAISED.

A new political issue was raised with the signing of the bond contract by the Industrial Commission for the sale of millions of dollars of bonds.

On the one hand Nonpartisans declared the contract is legal and puts the issue squarely before the incoming administration of carrying out the league program and shows the credit of the state has been re-established.

On the other hand Independents declared the deal will cost the state hundreds of thousands of dollars. J. J. Kehoe, attorney for taxpayers who sought to break the former contract, declared today that before they went into the suit they ascertained that North Dakota bonds could be sold at par with 5-1/2 per cent interest, one bond house saying it would take up to $50,000,000 at that figure. The bonds in the new contract bear 6 per cent.

Figuring possible loss to the state on the interest over a period of years Independents asserted that the excess cost to the state would be hundreds of thousands and probably some millions of dollars.

The new state administration will have before it for immediate consideration the new bond contract, the closing of which was announced last night.

Expression of opinion on the contract is reserved by the new administration pending an examination of the contract. The deal was closed with Spitzer, Rorick and company of Toledo, Ohio. Briefly it calls for the sale of $12,300,000 of state bonds at par excepting the bank bonds and at a rate of 6 per cent interest excepting the bank bonds. The Spitzer, Rorick and company acted for a syndicate of eastern bond buyers.

The new contract is entirely legal, since the bonds are sold at par, the outgoing administration declares. Representatives of the bond company have already sought out Mr. Nestos on the subject. The terms of the contract, which is between the Bank of North Dakota and Spitzer, Rorick and company, briefly are:

Previous delivery of $1,486,500 of 5-3/4 per cent real estate bonds at discount of 5 per cent is ratified.

Remaining $8,000,000 real estate bonds authorized under existing law, maturing 1931 to 1948, are sold at par, interest rate increased to 6 per cent.

Real estate bond to be delivered as follows: $500,000 in 30 days and $500,000 each 30 days thereafter or earlier at request of bond company.

$2,000,000 mill and elevator bonds sold at par, 6 per cent interest, delivery as follows: $200,000 in 45 to 60 days and $200,000 each month thereafter.

$1,000,000 home builders bonds sold, delivery of $100,000 in 30 to 60 days and $100,000 each month thereafter.

$1,300,000 bank bonds bearing 5 per cent interest are sold at price to net buyer 5-5/8 per cent, immediate delivery.

The present contract with Spitzer, Rorick and company except as to bonds already delivered, is abrogated.

Independents Criticize

In some independent quarters there was disposition to severely criticize the outgoing Industrial Commission for making the bond deal on the eve of leaving office. Some declare that the price of 6 per cent interest is higher than North Dakota need pay on her bonds and that South Dakota has sold bonds at a 1-1/2 per cent with out trouble.

Particular criticism was leveled toward the sale of Homebuilders Association bonds when the incoming administration had made plain its intention of salvaging this department. The outgoing administration viewed it as a good business deal made at the time because the present Spitzer Rorick contract was under fire in supreme court with a prospect of it being declared invalid. Some Nonpartisans viewed it as placing the Independents in a hole politically.

Bond Sale Cost $130,000.94

In connection with the closing up of business the state auditing board late yesterday approved bills on bonds sales as follows: Voucher presented by Rev. T. Webb $27,967.77; Committee on Horace E. Davis, of New York, for miscellaneous sales and aiding in

CURTAIN IS LOWERED ON DRAMATIC FIVE YEARS OF NORTH DAKOTA FIGHT AND NEW ACTORS TAKE THEIR PLACES

Nonpartisan Control is Surrendered in State After Hectic Political Battles of Last Five Years in Which Eyes of Nation Turned Toward North Dakota

The curtain was lowered today upon a five-year drama of North Dakota politics. Quietly the actors slipped through the wings, shed the habiliments of public office and passed out of the theater of governmental affairs. They had been the chief figures on a turbulent stage, acclaimed, assailed. Upon them had been centered the spotlight of a nation.

The curtain raised again. New actors took the stage, a new scene was unfolded. Again the eyes of a nation-wide audience turned toward the North Dakota theater. The new triumvirate entered confidently, faced the big task of winning a great portion of a critical audience from the intoxicating impetuosity of the past, began to perform slowly and carefully, resolved to win favor from gallery to orchestra.

In the foyer again paced many a "first-fighter" at North Dakota inaugurations here again after an absence of five years. Their kind of acting again was promised; they felt an old intimacy with the actors.

LARSON COMING, LEAVES GOAT

Gust Larson will be here. The goat will not.

Larson telephoned The Tribune from Douglas last night to ascertain the supreme court's action on the injunction case.

Receiving the news he shouted "hurrah" and said "tell the boys I'm starting for Bismarck" and added that though he might get here late he would be here nevertheless.

Larson is the man who took the "Nonpartisan Goat" from Douglas to Minot for a celebration.

SUPREME COURT DECIDES SUIT WAS TOO LATE

Judges Unanimous in Denying Injunction Against Canvassing Board

O. E. LOFTHUS RESIGNS

The writ of injunction to stop the state canvassing board from canvassing the vote was rejected on the general theory that the petitioners were estopped because they did not raise the questions previous to the election, under the provision of the recall amendment, according to Justice J. E. Robinson.

The suit was improperly drawn in that it was directed against a board charged with performing a plain duty of law, Judge Robinson said.

The court, he said, was unanimous in dismissing the petition for a temporary injunction to prevent the canvassing of present state officials defeated in the recall election.

The last full afternoon of Nonpartisan league control in the state capitol was attended by ripples of excitement not unlike a legislative session.

Early yesterday afternoon two score or more Nonpartisans interested in the election nullification suit gathered in corridors of the capitol. The supreme court was hearing the appeal in the case in which breaking of the bond sale contract with Spitzer, Rorick and company was sought.

After hearing the argument the supreme court returned to the chambers late in the afternoon, while anxious people loitered in the lobby awaiting for a sign of decision from behind the closed doors. During the afternoon a number of old war horses of North Dakota politics filtered in, here for the inauguration.

It was about 3:30 p. m. when the supreme court announced that the injunction writ was denied, and the Nonpartisans who counted upon the suit to retain present officials in office moved slowly from the building.

Lofthus Quits

During the afternoon the banking board held a meeting and later O. E. Lofthus, state bank examiner, submitted his resignation to Governor Frazier, who appointed Gilbert Semingson, chief deputy in his place. Mr. Lofthus refused to make any statement as to why he resigned.

Mr. Lofthus had been criticised severely by Independents ever since the first Scandinavian American bank closing and reopening, and it was known that Governor-elect Nestos would request his resignation.

RIOTING NEARS CIVIL WAR IN BELFAST TODAY

13 Persons Dead and Thirty Injured in Bombing and Shooting in City

SHOOTING AND BOMBING

Three Are Killed When Tramcar Full of Shipyard Workers is Bombed

ANOTHER VICTIM

Belfast, Nov. 23.—(By the A. P.) Belfast's long list of fatalities as the result of factional rioting began to grow early today, one victim being added almost at the outset to the 35 killed in outbreaks attending the assumption of governmental power by the new Ulster parliament yesterday.

The first victim of the day, a foreman who was engaging laborers in Dock street for the shipyards, was picked off by a sniper.

Belast, Nov. 23.—(By the A. P.) Rioting which began in Belfast Sunday had its climax yesterday in a state of shooting, bombing and turmoil approaching civil war. It is declared the disorders were planned to coincide with the assumption yesterday of the government of Ulster by the northern parliament.

Dispatches to the London press from Belfast placed the blame according to the sympathy of respective newspapers. However, it seems established that the Sinn Feiners were responsible for the bombing of a tramcar full of shipyard workers late in the afternoon and the consequent death of three persons and injuries to thirty.

The various counts of the day's disorders suggest that the aggression on the whole was reciprocal and due to the ever-existing rancor between the Nationalists and Orangemen.

The total casualties in the series of outbreaks up to midnight last night stood at 13 dead with more than 100 seriously wounded in the hospitals. Scores of other persons less seriously injured were treated at their homes.

PRISONERS DASH OUT

Galway, Ireland Nov. 23.—(By the Associated Press) Forty political prisoners confined in the prison here rushed the wardens today while a fire of uncertain origin was blazing in two sections of the prison.

The men seized the keys and barricaded themselves with six wardens in another part of the prison.

CONGRESS TO ADJOURN TODAY

Will Meet Again in Regular Session in December

Washington, Nov. 23.—Sine die adjournment of Congress was expected tonight bringing to an end the extra session which was called by President Harding April 12. The senate had agreed to a vote late today on the tax bill and with this out of the way was prepared to adjourn while the house was marking time awaiting for the senate to declare its business finished.

Associated Press, No. 23.—Final enactment of the tax revision bill was accomplished today with the acceptance by the senate of the conference report. The measure now goes to the President, whose signature makes it law. Senator Judd opposed the report. This is the bill which repeals the excess profits and transportation taxes, does away with most of the so-called nuisance and luxury taxes, reduces individual taxes all along the line and increases the corporation income tax from ten to twelve and a half per cent. The measure generally is conceded only as temporary, and the understanding is a new bill will be framed within a year or so.

The regular session will be convened in December when the Ford-Newberry election contest and other measures which have been under immediate consideration in the closing days of the extra session will again be taken up.

SFT CONTEST HEARING

Washington, Nov. 23.—The senate today agreed to dispose of the Ford-Newberry electoral election contest early in January. The agreement, which was by unanimous consent, provides that the election case shall be considered on the fourth calendar day on which the senate is in session after January 1 and to be debated after two days of general discussion.

NEW GOVERNOR KINDLES PRIDE IN STATE, PLEDGES ECONOMY. ASKS STRIFE BE FORGOTTEN

R. A. Nestos, Sveinbjorn Johnson and Joseph A. Kitchen Are Inducted into Office in State Capitol With House Chamber Crowded—Chief Executive Outlines Administration Plans in Inaugural Address—Will Make Probe of State's Business and Report to People.

R. A. Nestos, inaugurated this afternoon as the thirteenth Governor of North Dakota, kindled the fires of an awakened state pride.

With the premise that "fundamentally the state of North Dakota is, I believe, a better field for investment than any other state in the union" Governor Nestos promised on behalf of the new administration and economical, fair and open state administration.

FRAZIER SAYS FAREWELL; NOT AT INAUGURAL

Governor Leaves Farewell Message Thanking Friends For Loyal Support

HAS BUT ONE REGRET

Governor Lynn J. Frazier left the state capitol about 1 o'clock this afternoon not to return as Governor. He declined to attend the inaugural but during the morning Governor Frazier and Mr. Nestos had a long talk.

Before leaving Governor Frazier gave out the following message: "I have but one more message before I leave the capitol for the farm, and that is a message of heartfelt thanks to all members of the Nonpartisan League and to all other citizens who have so loyally supported my administration through five long years of struggle and who have stood by me and my associates in victory and defeat."

The only regret I have as I surrender the responsibilities of office, is that we have not been able to render greater service to the people of our beloved state, but we have done the best that was in us, and the fight is still on and will be until the complete success of the Industrial Program is assured. We have left the Bank of North Dakota, the keystone of the program, in splendid financial shape for our successors to use, and I sincerely hope they will be able to immediately aid our hard pressed farmers. I leave office with malice toward none and charity for all and with the abiding conviction that the people of North Dakota will not only settle the grave problems that confront them but will, in the future as in the past, be in the front trenches of the forces that are now struggling to establish economic freedom for the producing classes of the world."

(Signed) Lynn J. Frazier

Governor Frazier told Mr. Nestos he would move out of the Governor's mansion this afternoon if it was desired. Mr. Nestos assured him that he did not desire this. They shook hands in cordial manner as they parted.

BUSINESS MEN AT COMMISSION

Ask Improved Service Upon The Soo Railroad Line

A score of Bismarck business men were present at the hearing before the state railroad commission this morning at which the business men asked the railroad commission to order the institution of daylight business service on the North and South Soo lines so that persons may come to Bismarck transact business and get home the same day.

The hearing was on an order to show cause to the Soo line. The change of schedule proposed, it was stated, was on account of the necessity of making connections and for reducing a loss in operating revenues on the branch.

J. P. Selby was the first witness for the local business men and explained the importance and necessity of the daylight business service and offering to the new proposed schedule.

JURY VISITS FATTY'S HOTEL

San Francisco Nov. 23.—The jury trying Roscoe Arbuckle for manslaughter today was scheduled to visit the Hotel St. Francis where the film comedian host at a party last Labor Day is alleged to have inflicted injuries which caused the death of Virginia Rappe.

He invited the people to forget rancor and strife with the statement that "It is the hope and purpose of the incoming administration to forget as far as possible the differences and discords of past campaigns and to view the present situation in the state calmly, dispassionately and with but one thought and purpose in mind, that of serving honestly the best interest of the citizenship of our state."

The inauguration took place as scheduled, the suit to stop it having been put aside by the supreme court late yesterday.

In his speech Mr. Nestos said:

1. No session of the legislature is in immediate prospect.
2. A thorough examination and public report of every state department, industry and activity will be made.
3. He will reduce state expenses by dispensing with employees and decreasing the payroll.
4. He will endeavor to "redeem the credit of the state" and attract outside investors.
5. He will keep campaign promises.
6. The administration favors completing the Grand Forks mill and elevator.
7. North Dakota should assist in movements that tend toward improvement of conditions on the farm and solution of marketing problems.

Ceremonies Held

The change in administration publicly took place in the chamber of the house of representatives this afternoon. The canvassing board met this morning and after canvassing the vote placed the official majority of Mr. Nestos at 4,500, that of Sveinbjorn Johnson for attorney general at 7,000, and that of Joseph A. Kitchen for commissioner of agriculture and labor at 6,000.

Crowded into the house chamber were men and women from all parts of the state. Many of them arrived just in time for the inauguration, having ascertained by long-distance telephone that the supreme court had denied the writ asked for staying the canvassing board. Two score of independent legislators were here for the inaugural. Among those in attendance were Dr. P. A. Nestos, of Minot, brother of the governor, and Dr. Nestos' wife.

Secretary of State Thomas Hall presided at the inauguration. The audience opened the ceremonies after the introduction by singing "America." Right Rev. Vincent Wehrle, O.B.S. Bishop of Bismarck, gave the invocation. Judge Christianson of the supreme court administered the oath and delivered a short address.

The Sergeant at Arms was Steele Hendrickson. Presiding officer Hall appointed independent members of the legislature who were present to escort the judges of the Supreme Court, Bishop Wehrle and the newly elected officials to the house chamber.

As they entered the chamber which was decorated with American flags the audience which filled the lower floor gallery and occupied most of the available standing space broke into cheers.

Before proceeding with the program, Mr. Hall read a telegram from J. F. T. O'Connor of Grand Forks expressing confidence in the new officials.

The Community Chorus sang the North Dakota hymn. Governor Nestos delivered his inaugural address, the Community chorus sang and a reception in the governor's office followed.

ENGINEERS TASK IS TO TAME THE MISSOURI RIVER

Now Working From Fort Benton, Mont., To Point Near Alton, Illinois

RIVER ACTS LIKE OUTLAW

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Nov. 22.—(By the Associated Press)—Taming the Missouri river, outlaw among American rivers, is the task of the United States army river engineers, whose headquarters are here. Their sector is the Missouri river, from Fort Benton, Montana, to a point opposite Alton, Illinois, where the Missouri, with a roar and a rush joins the Mississippi, and thereafter sweeps with some degrees of calmness to the Gulf of Mexico.

The task of the river engineers is to persuade and coerce the Missouri river into "staying out," and to coax it out of its long-time custom of changing its channel whenever the whim moves it.

This may sound like an exaggeration but to anyone who has spent a day on the river with the army engineers, and has seen the Missouri eating away at a corn field with wicked energy, swallowing up earth, corn, weeds, fences and trees, it seems sometimes as if the river actually had a personality, and an outlaw one at that. And while carrying away farm land from one bank, somewhere else it is equally busy, piling up sand, mud, and driftwood, making land out of what was river a few days before. Then, too, the river has a habit of occasionally clogging its own channel, building sand bars so long and so high that it must needs become broad and shallow in order to continue its restless course.

It is a constant struggle, but it is not a hopeless one, and the engineers point with a measure of justified pride to those places along the stream where they have built dikes, which resulted in the making of land; to the concave bends where revetments have stopped the river from cutting its bank. Given a dike on one side and a revetment on the other, and constant diligence, so that small breaks may be repaired before they become serious, the river engineers say they can keep the stream fairly well anchored. Fifty years ago, before the coming of the railroads, the Missouri was the great western artery of commerce, and steamboats plowed its waters as far as Fort Benton, Montana. Knowing how difficult it always is for the railroads to handle great wheat harvests, one wonders why it is not possible for the river to handle some of this traffic.

The engineer quietly tells you that it is possible, then he goes on and explains the two general reasons why it is not being done. One is that there is now very little money for improving and keeping up the river.

The other reason is that many mistakes have been made in the type of towboats used. Boats designed for any other river in the world but the Missouri, have been used, and because of the shifting depths of the river have failed. With all its disadvantages, there is a good deal to be said, according to the engineers, for the old paddle wheel steamer, side wheeler, or stern wheeler, that draws little or no water, which condition is ideal for service on the Missouri.

The river is navigable, say the engineers, and with sufficient time and patience, it can be made manageable. "A great game if you don't weaken," one says to Major Wilkes, in charge of the river work, and his aides.

"You can't weaken," they assure you, "You just keep after it, for the river itself never weakens."

DEFER ACTION ON ORDINANCE

City Commission Passes Tax Ordinance Over a Week

The city commission, in meeting last night, deferred action on the ordinance requiring taxicab line owners to carry liability insurance. Scott Cameron appeared in opposition to the ordinance, saying it would put too heavy a burden on the taxicab owner without giving the passenger proportionate benefit.

Police Commissioner Hensler announced that the fire whistle will blow next Sunday morning when Marshal Foch's train arrives in Bismarck. The commission granted use of the Auditorium for the Foch meeting.

FORDNEY TARIFF BILL IS BLOW TO NATION'S AGRICULTURE, QUICK SAYS

Washington, Nov. 22.—"Create a desert of American farm land and call it protection." Such will be the fate of agriculture if the five year graduate duty on potash is not stricken from the Fordney Bill, in the opinion of Herbert Quick, author and economist, in an interview just issued.

The Senate Finance Committee is now holding hearings on the Fordney bill and the so-called "free list," in which the potash "joker" appears will shortly reach the calendar for public argument.

Mr. Quick, who was one of the original members of the Federal Farm Loan Bureau and is a national authority on sources of fertility, declared he had "no words severe enough fitly to characterize the man, who knows the facts, who, in Congress or out, will support a measure so inimical as to make fertilizer dealer to the interest of these experimenters, in potash production who are asking for the tariff."

"Whether a man be a protectionist or a free trader," Mr. Quick continued, "I fail to see how, if he be devoted to the real interests of his country, he can support the project to place a tariff on potash. We have no assurance that the American supply of potash can ever be sufficient for the American demand no matter how the tariff affects the industry in other word, from the mills is a by-product and will be produced anyhow at a profit. It does not need protection. "The Texas potash beds may or may not exist in any large quantity. I have been investigating them for years, and they elude one who seeks plentiful, cheap potash. The saline lakes of Nevada and Nebraska and the arid regions are a fertilizer joke. They were useful when the European supply was cut off, and that is the extent of their utility so far as potash is concerned."

"To force the farmer to rely on American sources of supply for potash is to condemn him to a real scarcity as to quantity and to prices which he cannot pay. This is not a mere fertilizer problem. It is a problem of national welfare. When the lands needing fertilizers once run down about so low in fertility they will never be brought back. This law tends to create a desert and call it protection."

"Farmers in my neighborhood are ceasing to fertilize though they have practiced it for generations. They cannot pay the prices. To put a tariff on potash is to increase the price. High freight rates make this problem more difficult. A tariff, or any plan which will force us to depend on the American sources, inadequate as they are, would be fatal."

MELLONS GIVE HUGE SUM TO UNIVERSITY

Pittsburgh, Nov. 22.—A. W. Mellon, secretary of the treasury, and his brother, R. B. Mellon, have given to the University of Pittsburgh a plot of land acquired at a cost of $1,500,000. It was announced by Chancellor John G. Bowman last night. The property, some 14 acres, lies between the university and Carnegie Institute, in the educational center of the city, and on it will be erected laboratories dedicated to chemistry, physics, mathematics and biology.

The gift supplements a former gift of the Mellons which some years ago resulted in the opening of the Mellon Institute of Research as a part of the university. It is the intention of the university, Dr. Bowman said, to make the institution the "world center in scientific teaching and research."

RAINMAKING AN ABSURDITY SAYS DEAN E. S. KEENE

Case of Betting on Weather With all the Advantage in Favor of Rainmaker

RAINMAKING IS A FAKE

Fargo, N. D., Nov. 22.—That the business of rainmaking, indulged in by a few men in some of the arid regions of the United States and other countries, is, in the minds of scientists an absurdity and not worthy of refutation was the statement of Dean E. S. Keene of the School of Engineering of the North Dakota Agricultural College in an address here today before the Science and Mathematics Section of the North Dakota State Teachers' Association.

Dr. Keene introduced his subject by telling of the payment last summer by the Medicine Hat United Agricultural Association of more than $5,000 to a rain maker and the retention of the same rainmaker for the 1922 season. Investigation by the dean developed that while the rainmaker had agreed to produce four inches of rain in three months, the average rainfall for the period was seven inches and that the weather stations adjacent but outside of the area in which he worked reported more rain than fell in the Medicine Hat area.

"It is not the present intention to attempt to disprove the possibility of making rain," said Dr. Keene. "To meteorologists and those of scientific mind who are acquainted with atmospheric phenomena, rainmaking is an absurdity. To attempt to disprove a manifest absurdity is a waste of time. Rainmaking is the practice of betting on weather conditions with the advantage much in favor of the rainmaker. It is similar to the gentle art of bookmaking, in the case of horse racing. The bookmaker arranges a table, based on the average racing performance of the horses entered in a given race, and offers a scale of bets at odds to suit each condition; from even money to the 100 to 1 shot. In rainmaking the rainmaker bases his bet on the average rainfall.

"To the Scientist, rainfall is produced by precipitation from a saturated atmosphere. Unless the moisture is in the air, rain cannot be produced. If the moisture is present it can be precipitated only by a fall of temperature such as will over-saturate the air and the water will fall in drops as rain. The rate of rainfall will depend upon the rate of change of temperature to produce super saturation. This is well known to all who are acquainted with the physics of the air. In quantity, the amount of weather equivalent to an inch of rainfall on a square mile is more than 72,000 tons. It is therefore evident that the artificial production of rainfall represents the condensation of water in enormous quantity. No artificial means has yet been suggested that would produce a trace of moisture over an area of 100 miles in radius.

"In 1892 the United States Department of Agriculture was given the task of expending $10,000 that had been previously appropriated to demonstrate the possibility of stimulating rainfall by explosives. The result of the experiments were reported through the department to the Senate, February 24, 1892, in a pamphlet of 59 pages. The report is a description of the method in which the $10,000 were expended. There was nothing disclosed of value as to artificial rainmaking. At this time the business of rainmaking is a fake. It is a method of sharp practice which can be dispelled if the teacher of science will lay stress on the application of natural laws to everyday practice.

FLOODS DAMAGE ITALIAN TOWNS

Messina, Sicily, Nov. 22.—(By the Associated Press)—Cloudbursts have devastated the whole countryside in the region, entire villages being swept by the floods and lines of communication broken. Hundreds of persons are homeless and several deaths are reported.

MURDERED MAN ROBBED, BELIEF OF IOWA POLICE

Mason City, Ia., Nov. 22.—That robbery was the motive for the murder of George Harris, taxicab driver, whose mangled body was found on a railroad track at Plymouth, Ia., yesterday was the statement of police today. The blood-spattered car of the driver was found near the city. Harris was last seen in Nora Springs in company with two strangers. Police believe he was killed and robbed and his body placed on the railroad tracks.

REPORT GIVEN BY REV. NEWCOMB

Rev. G. B. Newcomb, superintendent of the State Humane Society and Society for the Friendless, makes the following report on work since midsummer:

Investigation of reported cases number of children involved 91. Conditions corrected and children allowed to remain to the number of 23. Children placed or going through the process of placing, 30.

Two boxes of clothing received and disposed mostly among prisoner families.

Helped in three instances to get the mother on the county pension.

Pendered service in four cases of illegitimacy and much other service given not mentioned here.

The society at this Thanksgiving time welcomes contributions in any amount and will gratefully receive also clothing especially for children. The cooperation of the public is also solicited in helping to place children. Apparently more than ever before families are going to pieces and helpless children must have good homes. We welcome prospective names of those held in good repute.

A STUDENT LOAN FUND ADVOCATE

Wilkinson Believes It Should Get More Publicity

Fargo, N. D., Nov. 22.—Greater publicity for student loan funds was advocated by J. W. Wilkinson, business manager of the University of North Dakota in an address before the Higher and Professional Education Section of the North Dakota State Teachers' association here today. Mr. Wilkinson held that better publicity would lead a larger number of worth while students to make the attempt to go to college.

"The loan fund should be a challenge to the student," Mr. Wilkinson told the assembled college teachers. "He should be made to know that if he is willing to make an effort in his own behalf to the extent of earning a part of his own expenses or that he has made the best of the aid given him by his parents, if he has shown aptitude, ambition, scholarship and industry and has good character, then he should have the benefits of the loan fund. In our own university, we confine our loans almost without exception, to juniors and seniors to enable them to complete their courses. If our loan fund were larger, we should probably make it available to sophomores also if they met the requirements that I have indicated."

"In our own University 65 per cent earn a part of their expenses and 30 per cent are entirely dependent upon their own support. Some are earners throughout the entire year, earning a part of their expenses during the summer and a part while attending school. My observation has been that the student who is at least partly dependent upon his own efforts, makes as good or better use of his advantages than the student who is supported by his parents."

IN BISMARCK

The Evidence Is Supplied by Local Testimony.

If the reader wants stronger proof than the following statement and experience of a resident of Bismarck, what can it be?

Clayton W. Ferguson, 608 3rd Ave., Bismarck, N. D., says "A year ago I had trouble with my kidneys. They were weak, at times, and I seemed to have no control over the kidney secretions. My back bothered me especially at night and I was stiff and lame. I had been doing some extra hard work and I blame that for the start of my trouble. I read about Doan's Kidney Pills and got two boxes. Doan's soon ended my trouble and I felt better in every way since taking them. I am pleased to give Doan's my endorsement."

Toe Nail Turns Out Itself if You Toughen Skin

A noted authority says that a few drops of "Outagro" upon the skin surrounding the ingrowing nail reduces inflammation and pain and so toughens the tender, sensitive skin underneath the toe nail, that it can't penetrate the flesh, and the nail turns naturally outward almost over night. "Outagro" is a harmless, antiseptic, manufactured for chiropodists. However, anyone can buy from the drug store a tiny bottle containing directions.

WANT COMPETENT TEACHERS, SAYS JOHN H. TIGERT

Claims Average Adult American Citizen Is Only Sixth Grader

Fargo, N. D., Nov. 23.—The farmer has never had a square deal in the economies of America and this makes it well nigh impossible to give the country boy and girl a square deal in the schools, John H. Tigert of Washington, D. C., U. S. Commissioner of Education, declared here today before the North Dakota State Teachers' Association.

"In spite of the great progress made in the consolidation of schools, two-thirds of the schools in the United States are one-room schools," Dr. Tigert said. "Here are to be found the most incompetent teachers, here are the shortest terms, here is the most meagre equipment and here the financial support is least."

"The nation has never achieved its dream of equal opportunity in education, the federal commissioner said, and this is characterized as a fundamental problem of the republic today."

In 1898 only a little more than half of the nation's children were actually in the public schools, he said, and of those only one out of ten got to high school and not more than one out of 50 to college.

"Instead of the average American having the fundamentals of a good education, the average adult American citizen is only a sixth grader in information and large numbers cannot even read and write the English language," Dr. Tigert declared.

Two things need to be done in this situation, Commissioner Tigert said. First, illiteracy must be cut off through enforcement of the laws requiring boys and girls to be in school in the school years. Then sufficient funds must be obtained to "make it possible for a competent man or woman to teach our children and live decently."

Addressing himself to the teacher problem, Dr. Tigert said:

"There are at the present time hundreds of thousands of teachers in the schools of the United States who are incompetent. The school rooms are no longer empty as they were during the war, but it has been estimated that not more than one out of four is really trained for efficient teaching. The average teacher is not more than an eleventh grader and countless numbers have never had a high school education."

"It is the greatest disgrace that America bears and the deepest insult that has ever been offered to any childhood that in an era of unparalleled prosperity in the richest nation that ever existed on the globe, sufficient funds were not available to pay red bladders men and women to teach the American boys and girls. That was in the period of the war and after but unless the American people realize, in the future, that teachers must be paid as much and more than artisans, janitors, delivery boys and scavengers, then let no one be surprised if the babel of ignorance should eventually destroy the temple of freedom."

A HALF MILLION BUSHEL GRAIN TO BE HANDLED

By U. S. Grain Growers, Inc. According To Report Of Mr. Gustafson

Atlanta, Ga., Nov. 23.—The U. S. Grain Growers, Inc., is now the largest cooperative grain marketing organization in the world, in point of membership, bushels of grain to be handled and territory covered, C. H. Gustafson, its president, told the American Farm Bureau Federation here today. This farmer corporation was formed in Chicago last April.

"We have nearly 25,000 members in ten middle west states representing at least fifty million bushels of marketable grain," Mr. Gustafson reported.

"This is more than either one of the two large farmers' companies in Canada have ever handled in a year. The most that any of these companies have handled in one year was some forty million bushels. In other and later years they have handled less than half that much."

"If the present rate of progress continues the U. S. Grain Growers will have 150,000 members a year from now, representing at least three hundred million bushels of grain."

"There is handled on the Chicago market in one year an average of about three hundred and twenty-five million bushels, so there is promise of our becoming a real factor in the grain markets of the world."

Any intention of manipulating prices of the farmers through their own marketing machinery was vigorously disavowed by president Gustafson. He said conditions because they believed market prices were manipulated, and if farmers were to adopt similar practices they "would deserve all of the public condemnation that would be heaped upon them."

"If we deal fairly with consumers, we shall prosper," he said. "But if we pervert our organizations to the

INAUGURAL ADDRESS OF GOVERNOR NESTOS FAVORS COOPERATION IN DEVELOPMENT OF AGRICULTURE

Governor R. A. Nestos' inaugural address follows:

"The inauguration of the governor ordinarily occurs with the opening of the legislative assembly and the constitution of our state therefore, provides that the governor shall communicate to the legislature at the commencement of each session, information as to the condition of the state and recommend such measures as he shall deem expedient."

"The circumstance under which this inauguration occurs are, however, extraordinary and unique in the annals of our country. I have been elected at a recall election, to complete the term of the man who was elected governor at the last general election. No legislature is in session and no session is in immediate prospect. No information or recommendation for the guidance of the legislative body need therefore form a part of the inaugural program, but rather a statement to the people of the state, of the plans and purposes of the incoming administration."

"I shall not at this time attempt to give accurate information as to the condition of our state, business, but may say that I propose without delay to make a thorough examination, as far as possible, of every department, industry and activity, for the purpose of which tax money has been used, and to lay the results of such investigation before the people of our state."

What Is Needed.

"But I do wish to inform you as to the administrative measures I deem expedient at the present time and what course of action I propose to follow in the management of the affairs of the state. It is the hope and expectation of the new administration to reduce the number of appointees and the size of the public payroll and to keep and employ in the service of the people only such as are of proven honesty and efficiency and willing to render the best service of which they are capable. In addition to the economies resulting from such increased efficiency and decreased payroll, the administration expects to exercise such other economies in the management of the public business as shall greatly reduce the cost of administration and to that extent reduce the tax burden of our people."

"I am mindful of the fact that for end of artificially affecting prices they will not last."

There is no brighter spot on the horizon of American agriculture today than that of cooperative marketing, President Gustafson observed.

"A large majority of American farmers have progressed far enough along the road of cooperation so that we can spend time profitably in explaining methods rather than be forced to mark time while we argue principles," he reported. "The farmer is not only ready to cooperate but he is working with his neighbors in township, county, state and nation."

SIDELIGHTS ON THE CONFERENCE

By NEA Service.

Washington, Nov. 23.—"Jimmy Wadsworth, Jr., senator from New York and chairman of the Senate Committee on Military Affairs, apparently doesn't think much of this armament limitation business."

"Jimmy" sat in the gallery the other day while the spokesmen for Great Britain and Italy approved "in principle" the Hughes naval reductions.

While Balfour and Kato made points that brought the audience to its feet, Wadsworth sat silent, glum and morose. Not once did he indicate even a semblance of approval.

Perhaps Jimmy is afraid his position as chairman of the Senate Military Affairs Committee will lose prestige with a reduction in military expenditures.

Still, maybe Wadsworth is congenitally opposed to modern advancement. He fought woman suffrage as bitterly as he now appears to oppose military reductions. Perhaps he can't help it. Maybe he was born that way. Some folks are.

Like her daddy, T. R. Alvin Roosevelt Longworth likes to smash convention and tradition.

Whereas all other ladies attending the conference wear hats—most colorful, and stunning hats—during the sessions, Alice lays hers aside when she enters the box.

Come to think of it, what do you suppose T. R. would say about this conference?

Foreign currencies having become more plentiful than valuable the past few years, it is not to be wondered that visiting foreigners have mistaken cigar store coupons for smaller denominations of American money.

One member of the French delegation, paying for cigars with a $10 bill, received in addition to the $5 and $1 bills in change some nicely engraved green coupons. These coupons, looking like money, were tucked away in the purchaser's wallet.

But when he tried to purchase some fruit with them he discovered they were worth no more than Russian roubles.

Lord Riddell was explaining the English viewpoint on armaments to a reporter.

"Do you take me?" he asked. "Do you take me?"

The interviewer looked blankly at his lordship.

"Oh I say," Riddell exclaimed, "I have made an error. I mean, do you get me?"

various reasons the confidence in our state as a field for investment has been shaken and that at the present time, the credit of the state and its people seem unduly impaired and I am confident that no good reason exists for the continuance of this condition and attitude. Fundamentally the state of North Dakota is, I believe, a better field for investment than any other state in the union. There was no inflation of land values during the period of high prices of agricultural products, but even such an increase in the market value of our land as would be warranted by its great productivity and that therefore the present valuation of North Dakota land is extremely low and offers an exceedingly attractive field for investment. Our bonded indebtedness is comparatively low, our lands fertile, our resources great and our people as intelligent, hard working and saving as the population of any state in the union. As the funds derived from the sale of securities and from other sources will no longer be diverted from the purposes for which appropriated or raised, but will be consistently kept for the uses intended and for no other, the state is in a position to undertake an additional scale of activity. In judging North Dakota investments, I am confident that in the months and years to come, there will be no better field in which to purchase mortgages, warrants, tax certificates, bonds and other securities than in the state of North Dakota, and I believe that the people of other states will recognize this fact, and that with such recognition will come an immediate investment in these North Dakota securities as a safe and desirable source of income, with the result that our credit will be speedily rebuilt and restored.

"The issues of the recent campaign were thoroughly discussed and carefully considered by the people of our state. In the outcome of the election following the campaign I believe therefore there lies an expression of confidence in the integrity and high purpose of the incoming officials and a feeling on the part of the people that the promises made during the campaign were sincerely made and that they will be honestly and fairly kept and performed by the officials elected. It is the purpose of the incoming administration

MINNESOTA'S BASKETBALL POSSIBILITIES

Minneapolis, Minn., Nov. 23.—With athletic directors at the University of Minnesota taking inventory of its victories and losses on the gridiron, following the close of the football season, attention is centered in the basketball possibilities of the Gopher institution.

Although but on candidate, Captain Adrian Kearney, has participated in Big Ten conference games. Dr. L. J. Cooke, the basketball coach, has a quantity of promising material which includes several former state college players.

Preliminary practice has been progressing favorably and Coach Cooke has selected his first squad, which will be composed of Kearney, Fogelberg, Sullivan, Forsell, Claydon, Becker, Hanson, Swanson, Pesek, Hultkrantz, Grimes, Doyle and Anderson. Hanson, Swanson and Pesek were basketball luminaries in the state college.

Coach Cooke does not predict a championship five, but with the promising material on hand, hopes to be near the top when the "Big Ten" basketball race is finished.

In an effort to overcome the handicap of lack of experience of some of the men before the season starts, Dr. Cooke has decided to recommend to the Minnesota Athletic Board, that the University of Kansas basketball team be invited to spend the Christmas holidays in Minneapolis, practicing daily with the Gophers and culminating the work in an exhibition game to defray expenses. This idea was first conceived at Kansas.

QUICK RELIEF FROM CONSTIPATION

Get Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets

That is the joyful cry of thousands since Dr. Edwards produced Olive Tablets, the substitute for calomel.

Dr. Edwards, a practicing physician for 17 years, and Calmel's old-time enemy, discovered the formula for Olive Tablets while treating patients for chronic constipation and torpid livers.

Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets do not contain calomel, but a healing, soothing vegetable laxative.

No cramping is the "keynote" of these little sugar-coated, olive-colored tablets. They cause the bowels and liver to act normally. They never force them to unnatural action.

If you have a "dark brown mouth"—bad breath—a dull, tired feeling—sick headache—torpid liver—constipation, you'll find quick, sure and pleasant results from one or two of Dr. Edwards' Olive Tablets at bedtime.

Thousands take them every night just to keep right. Try them. 10c and 50c.

tion to redeem the promises made and to carry out the plans fully, fairly and honestly.

Rebeld Credit.

"I am confident that in the rebuilding of the state's credit, the establishment of a system of rural credits efficiently conducted will be of great value to our people. While the act providing for a system of rural credits was lost because of the many who failed to vote on these laws, and while the existing laws place a limit of ten million dollars upon the bonds that may be issued for this purpose, I believe, nevertheless, that an efficient and economical system of rural credits can be established and conducted under the present laws of our state and will result in securing for the farmers of our state the privilege of making farm loans at a reasonable rate of interest and at small cost. Such defects as exist in the present law can be omitted and the public interest fully safeguarded by regulations to be adopted by the new industrial commission."

There is much difference of opinion among the people of our state as to the wisdom or feasibility of state-owned and state-operated industrial enterprises. An increasing number of our citizens believe that ultimately the solution of the many difficult and perplexing problems in connection with the marketing and milling of our grain will come through the voluntary co-operation of the people who raise the grain and in this view I personally concur. But at the present time we have entered upon the experiment of running a mill at Drake and establishing a mill and elevator of larger capacity at Grand Forks with the expectation that the Grand Forks project shall be completed and managed for the benefit of the farmers and taxpayers of our state. Nearly a million dollars had already been invested in the buildings and both as a matter of salvaging this property most advantageously and also for the purpose of furnishing the opportunity to those thousands of farmers, who honestly believe that such a state owned and operated mill and elevator can be made profitable, to have the experiment tried fully, fairly and honestly. We shall as we promised in our platform and campaign speeches, complete the mill and elevator at Grand Forks as economically and speedily as possible. We propose to provide the funds required not only for the completion of the mill and elevator but also for the working capital of the project and then propose to arrange for a management, honest, efficient and economical so as to insure a fair and honest trial of the experiment.

"Our state is an agricultural state and is therefore vitally interested in everything that affects the welfare of the farmers. The cause of the low prices for so many of the farm products is therefore a matter deserving of our attention and most careful study. Many of the articles that the farmer must buy have not been reduced in price in proportion to the fall in the prices of the products raised on the farm. These products are, however, not peculiar to North Dakota, but are problems confronting the farmers in every state of the union. I believe that North Dakota can and should assist in the movements that tend toward the improvement of conditions on the farm, solution of the marketing problems and

Mandan-Killdeer Mountain Trail Is Formed

The Mandan-Killdeer Mountain trail was organized last night in Mandan by representatives of 14 towns along the route which will run from Mandan to Center in Oliver county over the present established trail thence west to Hanover and north to Hazen in Mercer county. From Hazen the trail will be blazed through all of the north line towns to Killdeer, thence to a point 20 miles northwest of Killdeer to Oakdale, at the foot of the mountains.

David Schwartz, of Golden Valley, was elected president; L. E. Rose, of Benah, vice-president and J. T. Holm, of Golden Valley, secretary-treasurer. Assessments representing a total levy of $539 were made against the various towns and pledged to payment.

The meeting was called by the Mandan Commercial club.

FORMULA FOR SUCCESSFUL ATHLETICS

Make College Athletics As Attractive As Possible, Says President Tilden

MATTER OF NECESSITY

Galena, Ill., Nov. 23.—President J. M. Tilden of Lombard college here has a little formula for successful college athletics. It is this: "Make athletics as attractive as possible."

"Get the best coach you can." Simple but President Tilden declares it accounts for his school, with only 102 men enrolled turning out a football team which is more likely to score 100 points than 50.

"We pay our football coach our maximum salary," President Tilden observed today. "All the faculty and everybody is happy."

"It is a matter of necessity. You cannot run a college without athletics and to make a success of sports you must have the best coach you can find, for the same reason that you select the best possible professor for French or the highest authority possible for chemistry. Then with athletics an assured success we have a popular lever with which to lift the men in their educational efforts."

There is that one other great element—Material and President Tilden has been going after that just as vigorously as he campaigned for a football teacher. His choice for coach fell on Paul J. Schissler then assistant director of athletics at the University of Nebraska and head coach of its basketball and baseball teams. Schissler had made a great record at Nebraska but liked the idea of heading his own athletic department even at a much smaller school.

It is President Tilden's theory that no material inducements need be extended to bring good athletes to the college.

"Just make your school attractive to the athlete," is the Lombard president's idea and he points to those 102 to 0, and 91 to 0 scores to show how it works.

"Why," said he, "you can sell athletics just the same as you would neckties. You would not sell neckties by offering your customers a bonus, and you do not need to in football. Make your athletic opportunities look so good to the man coming to college that he will want to take advantage of them."

"First we realized that our football field was old and run down. When we finished our stadium I began sending out word through the state to come and see it. And they came."

"Now we have our coach, and he is real. Our boys play like a machine. Forty-eight of the 102 men in college are out for the team and they all come out every night; while 80 men in all are out for athletics of one kind or another."

Lombard got off to a fine start by beating Palmer College 102 to 0, then took over Bradley Institute of Peoria 53 to 0, Monmouth 91 to 0, Des Moines University 7 to 0, and St. Louis University fell by 61 to 0.

President Tilden looks on college athletics from the inside. He was a track star himself, winning his letter for three years at Worcester Polytechnic.

the four sections into which the vocational work in the state falls.

To show the advance of the recent years Mr. Cavett compared the finances of 1918-19 with the finances of the last completed year 1920-21 as follows:

Money received from the Federal government 1918-19 was $11,317.80 which was spent as follows: agriculture, $5,117.50; trades and industries, $95; home economics, $1,000; teacher training, agriculture $1,875; home economics, $1,775; balance reverted to the government $1,465.

In 1920-21 we received $25,108.97 in Smith-Hughes funds. The money was spent as follows: agriculture, $12,976.60; home economics (state and federal funds) $7,150; trades and industries, $1,000; teacher training, $8,077.52.

For the first of the years compared, Mr. Cavett reported that eight schools had standards which permitted them to receive aid in agriculture, nine in home economics and one in trade and industries. For the latter year, the schools which had attained the proper standards were, fifteen in agriculture, sixteen in home economics and four in trades and industries.

BROTHERS WORK HARD FOR OLD GOLD OF IOWA

Aubrey Devine Gets Most Of Credit On Gridiron, But Glenn Is Nearly as Good

Iowa City, Ia., Nov. 23.—Two brothers—Aubrey and Glenn Devine—are the chief reasons why the University of Iowa football eleven is on the verge of winning its first Western Conference championship in twenty years, for, while to the average person the Iowa team is largely Aubrey Devine, to persons who have followed the eleven closely it has become more and more evident that Glenn, comparatively unknown, deserves almost as much credit as Aubrey, the All-Western star known to every football enthusiast.

When the Old Gold of Iowa floated triumphantly from the goal posts after games with Notre Dame, Illinois, Purdue and Minnesota, it was Aubrey Devine who generally had done most of the ground gaining. It was Aubrey who hurled the successful forward passes with unerring accuracy and it was Aubrey whose magic toe booted the ball for points. Few realized that but for Glenn, Iowa might not have been victorious, for Glenn's steady and valiant playing was generally of the type that drew little attention but did much toward winning the game.

Glenn opens holes for Aubrey, he spills the opposing tacklers, he dumps interference for Aubrey to make tackles and—best of all—if Aubrey happens to cut loose with a wild forward pass, Glenn generally manages to share it—sometimes with only one hand.

Thus the plunger—Glenn—has drawn little attention, and yet without him or someone like him, Aubrey, the star—might have much more difficulty than at present in making his great plays.

Aubrey without Glenn would be a real star—there is no doubt of that—but with Glenn he's one of the greatest in the country.

While these two men have done more than any other pair of players to keep Iowa to the front, the team has several more stars.

In the line Slater, the giant negro, and Belding at tackle and end have consistently been chosen as all-conference and all-western material for several years. Both are playing their fourth season on an Iowa team by virtue of the S. A. T. C. ruling. Slater especially seems to be putting up the most consistently brilliant game of his career this fall.

However, the present strength of the Hawkeyes lies not so much in reliance upon the dependables of other seasons as in the development of new men who are more than holding their own with the old stars. It is doubtful if another line in the conference is as good from one end to the other as the Old Gold forwards, and the Iowa line, plus Gordon Locke at full-back, is enough to cause trouble for any team in America.

Locke is unusually dependable, for when the Hawkeyes are five yards from a touchdown they call on Locke, and Locke generally goes over in one smash leaving a trail of husky opponents on either side of him and underneath. Once through the line Locke also is a good open field runner.

Thompson at left tackle is regarded as a find. He is playing his second year. Kadesky at left end is a better man on defense than Belding. Slater is the old reliable at opening holes. Heldt and Minick have collaborated to make many an advance possible, but Heldt is especially strong on defense. Mead fills the breach between Heldt and Slater.

At carrying the ball the Iowa offense is mostly a two man proposition. Either Aubrey Devine stands back with his triple threat to run, pass or kick or else Locke takes the ball from his place in a threatening interference and charges through the line. Glenn Devine is especially strong on defense, at catching passes, or in spilling the opposition to make room for Aubrey. Shuttleworth at the other half can carry the ball well when called on and is fast enough to fit in well with the rest of the backs.

LOOK HIM OVER! HE WANTS TO BE A FIGHTER

That man—pale in the middle is Jan Van Alst, 10 years old now and 9 feet 3 inches tall. By the time he really grows up, he's expected to be quite a giant. He waded into a Chicago gymnasium the other day and announced he'd like to learn to be a prizefighter. Jan Moore, who's shown shaking hands with him here, looked him over and told him he might be quite a figure in a ring, but they'd have to make the prize ring larger before he could operate efficiently there. Jan hails from Holland.

over the right of the state to break the banking monopoly and secure cheap short term credit for farmers, and this too must be pushed by the new administration, or it will shortly go down before the flood of ballots from the outraged farmers.

"The League officials have been pioneers. Not for North Dakota only, but for the entire nation, they have blazed a new road. It is a road that the people of all the states must follow, for it is the only road that leads out of the swamp of debt and deflation into which big business has lead the farmers and workers."

"The League officials have fought a good fight. But they have not finished. There is more ahead. At most they will have but a short rest. It is unbelievable that the I. V. A. officials, with their hybrid backing, and their facing-both-ways promises, can accomplish anything worth while, in the face of a national depression that is dragging down even the Harding administration."

The League veterans will be called into the service again. The good wishes of every Leaguer go with them into their temporary retirement and these same good wishes will drag them forth again within a short time, to make them once more the standard bearers for the fight that must go on forever, so long as the wealthy and the powerful oppress and starve and rob the men and women who toil."

re-rotating first Spitzer, Rorick deal $23,000, the commission being 1-1/2 per cent on $1,771,600 of bonds; Bank of North Dakota commission, $1,706; Wood and Oakley, Chicago lawyers, examining bonds, $1,200.

The total amount paid out by the Industrial Commission in the bond sales is raised by these allowances to $120,999.94.

Paddock Resigns Governor Frazier Mr. Lompke and Mr. Hagan, of the Industrial Commission, held a final meeting this morning to clean up business.

HOT ACTION

Henry A. Paddock, secretary of the commission, had resigned last Saturday. Mr. Paddock said it was necessary for him to leave for Minneapolis tonight to hold a conference regarding future business. George T. Webb recently was named assistant and automatically becomes secretary of the commission.

The bond contract contains a preamble reciting the industrial commission's reasons as follows: "Whereas said contract was entered into in good faith by both parties upon advice of counsel that it was legal and regular; and

"Whereas, the price therein specified was the highest and best price and the terms the most favorable which we have been able to secure after aggressive advertising and selling campaign, carried on for several months preceding said sale; and

"Whereas, the need and demand of the farmers of the state for loans were very urgent and the Bank of North Dakota was in great need of funds to take care of its requirements and those of the state in carrying out the industrial program adopted by the citizens of the state;

"Whereas, you helped out the bank and the state by promptly taking up nearly $1,500,000 of real estate bonds, and

"Whereas, there has been a large advance in the market price of government, state and municipal bonds since said contract was made and you are willing to accept and pay the bank a higher price to secure said bonds, and enable you to carry out your commitments and contracts with others, and as we are convinced that a repudiation of our contract with you and failure to carry out its terms in good faith, whether voluntarily or involuntarily, would be a calamity and cause great injury and loss to the future credit and prestige of the Bank of North Dakota and the State of North Dakota and to arrange an amicable compromise and adjustment of all matters between us therefore this contract is entered into

In the market value of our land as would be warranted by its great productivity and that therefore the present valuation of North Dakota land is extremely low and offers an exceedingly attractive field for investment."

Mr. Nestos said that the establishment of a rural credits system under the law which failed of passage at the recall election would have been beneficial to the state, and that "while the act providing for a system of rural credits was lost because of the many who failed to vote on these laws, and while the existing laws place a limit of ten million dollars upon the bonds that may be issued for this purpose, I feel nevertheless that an efficient and economical system of rural credits can be established and conducted under the present laws of our state."

Favors Co-operation.

Taking official notice of the difference of opinion among many people in the state as to the wisdom of state industries Mr. Nestos said that "an increasing number of our citizens believe that ultimately the solution of the many and difficult problems in connection with the marketing and milling of our grain will come through the voluntary co-operation of the people who raise the grain and in this view I personally concur," but added that much money had been spent on the Grand Forks project with the expectation that it would be completed and he promised to complete it.

Forget Bitterness, He Asks.

In closing he said: "It is the hope and purpose of the incoming administration to forget as far as possible the differences and discords of past campaigns and to view the present situation in the state calmly and dispassionately and with but one thought and purpose in mind that of serving honestly the best interest of the citizenship of our state. I feel confident that the common bond of our obligations to the public and our desire for the welfare of the state will impel and inspire us all to unite in the single purpose of serving the people of our great commonwealth honestly and faithfully."

THE FIRST THANKSGIVING DAY

(Florence Bomer)

A long time ago, from a land far away. Our forefathers landed on Thanksgiving Day. One year had gone by since the brave Pilgrims came. Their orchards were loaded, their barns filled with grain. They set one day apart to give thanks to their Lord. Who had given to them of the best earth affords. And still do we keep their Thanksgiving Days. At the close of each year happy voices we raise. In thanks to our God for a bountiful yield. Of earth's richest gifts from the orchard and field.

Three hundred years ago the Pilgrim Fathers celebrated their first Thanksgiving Day. For one year they had lived in their new home; for one year God had preserved their lives against the many perils that beset them on all hands, and they were not unmindful of his watchfulness and care.

What a lesson to us is this spirit of thanksgiving that was displayed by our brave forefathers; what a difference was this spirit to the one being displayed today by so many of us. We complain at hardship—we who do not know what the word means; we lament and complain of hard times when we have no real conception of the term.

To many of us the word "hardship" means the relinquishment of some favored project, or the giving up of some small luxury.

Think what living conditions meant in the days of our Pilgrim ancestors! There were no tradesmen calling at their doors with provisions, and all such necessities; there were no railroads, or other means of transportation; there were no daily papers, shows, or other conveniences such as we take for granted.

Before the Pilgrim Fathers could eat they had to raise the products; before they could exist at all they had to hew down the forest giants to make their homes. Everything had to be done by hand—there were no factories, no houses, no schools.

And, think of their neighbors, untutored savages who at any minute might determine to pounce upon and destroy them.

But, God, in his infinite wisdom chose to protect the first settlers in this land; He caused their crops to flourish and caused their savage neighbors to help and aid them. In the annals of our history are the names of many noble redmen who oftentimes risked their very lives to save their white friends.

Let us hope that their love and trust went not unrewarded; let us hope that the race to which we belong appreciated these sacrifices.

Three hundred years means a long span of time to man whose days on earth are given as three score and ten. But they mean little in the growth of a nation. Our country is still young—and yet, think what we have accomplished; how far we have traveled since that first Thanksgiving Day.

Will the next three hundred years see as many wonderful changes as have the past three centuries? None of us can hope to live one-half that long, but future generations may look back at our mode of living and consider it on but little higher plane than we even now do past civilizations.

But, let all remember this: No country can get so powerful and mighty that it can do without God. We need Him, and ever shall even as did our Pilgrim Fathers.

THE STATE'S OLDEST NEWSPAPER
(Established 1873)

THE NEW ADMINISTRATION
Governor R. A. Nestos is taking a broad view toward the clean up job that confronts him. His is not an easy task and in every worthy effort to uphold the integrity of the state, he should be given the earnest cooperation of everyone who is big enough to place the good of the state above selfish desire.

Bismarck welcomes the new officials, the first to be seated as the result of a state wide recall election. They will find in the various official and semi-official organizations of this city that spirit of cooperative effort to promote the best interests of the state without thought of sectionalism, but only holding in mind the greatest good to the greatest number.

Mr. Nestos, and his colleagues, Attorney General Johnson and Joseph A. Kitchen, commissioner of agriculture and labor, are going to be too busy for the consideration of theoretical programs or political fence building. Their first and most pressing job is to get at the facts of the state's finances and the extent to which the credit of the state is pledged.

The first weeks will be busy ones and the notice to job hunters to keep away is timely for the work of pruning expenditures rather than increasing the budget to take care of political henchmen is the main consideration.

On behalf of the Capital City, The Tribune extends a hearty welcome to the new state officials and sincerely hopes that they can do much to restore normalcy and restrict state government to its proper functions and to provide the gradual if not the complete abandonment of industrial programs and other socialistic ventures.

SHOULD BE PROTECTED
One mess that must be cleaned up as speedily as possible is the Homebuilding Association. Many innocent purchasers of state built homes invested their money upon the assumption that the figures of cost given by the agents of the state were trustworthy.

They should be protected. No one expects the state to repudiate its contracts even though the agreements were not in writing. The intent of the law is plain and with a few exceptions, the people who embarked on the scheme believed their homes would be within the cost limit as fixed by the officials of the homebuilding association.

If there are legal barriers to the state assuming the difference in costs, and the home owners are in danger of losing their equity their original investment should be refunded and the state should take over the homes to salvage them for the protection of the taxpayers. That there are going to be losses is evident. Mr. Nestos and his legal advisers probably will work out a feasible plan that will mean justice to all.

The state, however, must make good on its promises and where performance of the unwise promises of the recent administration is impossible there is nothing else to do but refund the property owners money and take over the homes.

Equities acquired in these homes upon the assumption that the state was going to complete them within the limits set by the state should be protected. The state can hardly afford to do less than a reputable corporation would in the same exigency.

THANKSGIVING DAY
The first American Thanksgiving Day was celebrated 300 years ago. If you think that you haven't much to be thankful for, this year, turn back the clock to that first Thanksgiving.

The Pilgrims landed on Plymouth Rock Dec. 20, 1620. It had taken them 63 days to cross the Atlantic. Their first winter was a terror of bitter cold, disease and starvation. The woods were full of game, but they were not skilled at hunting. They had no fish hooks small enough for shore angling. Clams were their chief food.

There were 102 Pilgrims in that original settlement. Death claimed half of them during the first winter.

In the spring, an Indian named Sqaunto taught them how to plant and cultivate corn. Autumn brought the first harvest. The pioneers celebrated with the first Thanksgiving Day.

Though the Pilgrims underwent frightful hardships, such as crop failures, and usually had little to be thankful for, they continued Thanksgiving Day as a permanent yearly custom.

Compare our lot with the Pilgrim! We have a thousand times as much to be thankful for. The war is over. A sane attempt to prevent another war is being made by the Washington conference. Cost of living is coming down. Business depression is passing.

There have been fatter years, in the past, than 1921. But, in view of what has preceded, and the prospects for the future, it is doubtful if the American people ever had as much cause to be thankful as they have this Thanksgiving Day.

UNEXPECTED
Menotti Nanni, Chicago inventor, devised a "waterproof" safe. To show his supreme confidence in his handiwork, he allowed himself to be locked in the safe and lowered to the bottom of the harbor at Baltimore.

When they pulled him up, two feet of water in the safe and Menotti had had a good square look at the Great Divide.

The platitudes writers, it seems, are not always right. Self-confidence is powerful, but it has limitations. The elephant has great confidence in himself, but he always tests a bridge with his fore-foot before stepping on it.

FOOLED
A London newspaper, the Opinion, prints a cartoon with the caption, "Who won the war?" The cartoon shows three men:

John Bull, labeled, "The man who thinks he did."

Uncle Sam, labeled, "The man who guesses he did."

A German, labeled, "The man who knows he did." The point in the cartoon is a fat satchel of orders, held by the German.

Such is the common notion, and a false one. It is true that Germany is getting a lot of orders. But that doesn't make her win the war. The profits from those orders go to pay indemnity.

WINNING
Two gamblers, described by Alfred Henry Lewis in his Wolfville stories, set up a gambling house, using overcoat buttons for chips. They were winning steadily when they noticed that the room was packed with people with huge supplies of the buttons, bought at a local store. The gamblers had to cash in, face value for each button presented.

"Well, we were winning, anyway," said one gambler.

"Yes," said his partner. "We were winning at such a rate that, if we'd kept on winning, we'd have lost $200,000."

That's how Germany "won the war." She corners foreign trade—and pays the profits as indemnity.

DISCOVERY
Did Columbus discover America? No, an Irishman arrived ahead of him. Gentlemen with green neckties make that claim at the "America's Making" exposition in New York.

They are convinced that America was discovered first by St. Brendon, the marine-monk, born in County Kerry in the year 484.

Norwegians and Icelanders claim the same honor for Leif Ericsson. So do the Welsh. Even the Chinese join in, saying that their explorers visited Lower California 52 years before St. Brendon was born.

Maybe they're right, all of them. Go further back. Indians really discovered America. Before that, mound builders. Prior to that, reptiles crawling out of the sea, ancestors of all life, according to science.

EDITORIAL REVIEW
Comments reproduced in this column may or may not express the opinion of The Tribune. They are presented here in order that our readers may have both sides of important issues which are being discussed in the press of the day.

CONDEMNING THE FRAUD
Chairman Fordney based his American valuation monstrosity in the tariff bill upon an intent to overcome the advantage foreign manufacturers had over American manufacturers as the result of the slump in European exchange. Probably it never occurred to him that means should be taken to restore the exchange equilibrium, and that the most certain means were to facilitate commerce and trade between the United States and Europe. It is a reasonable conclusion that protectionists of the Fordney stamp prefer to perpetuate a condition of which they can take advantage through a tariff absolutely prohibitive. And if this is true they certainly have figured out the way.

The New York University Bureau of Business Research has completed an inquiry for expert opinion on the operation of the valuation system conducted chiefly among professors of economics. The view from this angle is interesting, as already we have had an expression of profound condemnation from the class of business concerned with foreign trading. The expert economic opinion is almost unanimous that the system would decrease exports, decrease revenues, increase depression and unemployment, add to the living cost and in general affect adversely every phase of trade and industry in the United States.

Thus, if entirely true, would not daunt Mr. Fordney and his high protection clique. Suppose it did shut out imports—would not that give the special privilege group the monopoly of production that after all is what they are after? But it is an unsolved mystery how Mr. Fordney can whip his party in the House and Senate in line on such a palpable fraud.—St. Paul Pioneer Press.

OUT OF LUCK
(Florence Borner.)

Said Mr. Turkey Gobbler
To his loving little wife:
"Tomorrow is Thanksgiving Day,
I'm 'earing for my life;
I saw the farmers sharpening
His ax out in the shed,
So I am sort of worrying,
For fear I'll lose my head."

"I'll tell you what I'm going to do.
For I have just decided,
There's times in life when every one
By instinct should be guided;
And tho I don't believe in fate,
And am not superstitious,
There's many a longing eye now cast
On turkey dinner vistas."

"So I will quickly pack my grip,
And go off for awhile.
Since, just about this time of year,
A turkey's right in style;
Old Colonel Jones lives down the road,
About a mile, or so,
He's known as everybody's friend,
So there's the place to go."

So Mr. Turkey started out,
To visit this good friend,
Expecting if things went all right,
A day, or two he'd spend;
And when Thanksgiving Day was past,
He'd come back home again,
And thus he thought he would defeat
The wily ways of men.

Next morning when the Colonel woke.
He saw with great surprise,
A-sitting on his backyard fence,
A bird of monstrous size;
He quickly roused his sleeping wife,
And said: "As I'm a sinner,
A good, kind Providence has sent
A turkey for our dinner!"

PEOPLES' FORUM

TAKES EXCEPTION.
Nov. 22, 1921.

Editor Tribune:
In our issue of the 21st we find a long article with a heading in large type "20,000,000 in U. S. unable to read or write, says Hanna, president of N. D. Teachers' Ass'n." The article says expressly that in our country there are "20,000,000 unable to read a word or write a letter."

Years ago we heard in papers and speeches the praises of our public school, often in the most glorious terms. For a number of years the U. S. government has not permitted any foreigner to land in this country unless he is able to read and write (if there is actually such a large number of people unable to read and write it must consist mostly of native Americans. But I say, frankly, I do not believe that the conditions are as black as they are described. It is only since an organization has been started to centralize the whole educational system of the country by creating the office of Secretary of Education in Washington, D. C., with a large number of other officials and thus to curtail the rights of the individual states, that we hear so much about the sad condition of our educational system. I am sure, as soon as the proposed bills have been accepted by the U. S. Congress, we will again hear

EVERETT TRUE BY CONDO

ADVENTURE OF THE TWINS
By Olive Barton Roberts

The Land of Underneath, where Pim Pim reigned, and where Nancy and Nick were starting forth on new adventures, was a most remarkable place. True, it was under the earth, with the entrance by the dog-wood tree (where human eyes could not see it—unless, like the Twins, they wore enchanted Shoes), but that was no reason why it should be ugly or unattractive. To judge the Land of Underneath by the ground we dig down in to plant potatoes, we would be like judging a beautiful palace by the ugly, gray slates on the roof. One couldn't see the sky after entering, but then with glow-worms and fire flies and phosphor-escence beetles to throw lights on the shining walls and ceilings, which in turn caught the gleams and flashed them back like a thousand candles, it was as bright as day in most places. And as the ceilings were hung with crystals of every shape and size and different colors, it all looked like Fairyland, as indeed it was, or part of it.

The Twins were amazed at such beauty. "Why, Kip didn't bring us here," said Nancy, "when we came to visit the Brownies before."

"That's just like Kip," said a wheezy voice, and a little figure puffed into view, a very short fat little figure with knobby legs, and a hat with a broad brim, the crown of which pointed up like a church-steeple. But the hat was not so big that it hid his eyes. This queer little person had the very kindest eyes, and merry.

It was Pim Pim himself.

"I'm ever so glad to see you, my dear Twins," he said, shaking hands heartily all the way 'round, and tipping his big hat. "I was sure that my old friend the Mushroom here would help me out of my trouble. I hear you are fine workers."

SAINT PAUL MAN SAYS HE KNOWS WHAT IT WILL DO

C. I. Fitzsimmons Relates Facts Of Interesting Personal Experience

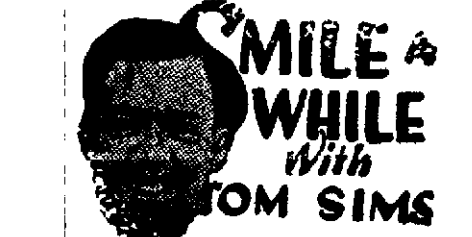

"I know what Tanlac will do for I have tried it. It gave me relief when everything else I had tried failed," said C. I. Fitzsimmons, 548 Ohio St., St. Paul, Minn.

"For two years everything I ate soured and bloated me up terribly, kept me in misery for hours after every meal. My back hurt me so bad I could hardly stand it and it was agony for me to bend over and straighten up again.

"Tanalac has made a new man of me and I eat, sleep, and feel better than in years. I'm just in fine shape and Tanlac deserves the credit."

Be well and strong. Be full of life and energy. Tanlac will do this for you.

"Tanalac is sold by leading druggists everywhere."

Exactly as was predicted by this paper several weeks ago. Thanksgiving day has arrived.

Also, as predicted, it falls on a holiday.

Of course, the odds favored us in this because nearly all great celebrations fall on holidays.

But then, if it had been one day sooner, or one day later, we would have missed both guesses.

Thanksgiving day, contrary to belief, was not originated by turkey growers and dealers.

Even the cranberry men were absent.

It started 300 years ago when the Pilgrims thought of how much obliged they were for living.

They gave thanks because they landed before we did. We give thanks because we landed after they had gone.

Their celebration was held on wild turkeys while the only thing wild about our turkey's is the price.

Wild turkey prices are harder to tame than wild turkeys were.

In fact, some of us must do without turkey. These can be thankful that there will be no hash Friday.

They can laugh while the others are talking turkey.

The Pilgrims, of whom we spoke, invited only the Redmen. We invite Oddfellows and everybody.

But they spelled it "thankful" while some of us spell it "thankful."

They practiced the "giving" while we mostly notice the "thanks."

For those who think they have nothing to be thankful for we give several reasons free.

Be thankful that you are not prosperous who has been sitting around the corner for nine months.

Be thankful you are not the missing link. Just think of what he is missing.

Be thankful you are not Tom Edison who doesn't sleep much.

Be thankful you don't have to have your picture made 365 days a year like Harding.

Really, all of us can be thankful except the turkey gobbler.

Eat, blink and be weary, for Friday we may be in bed.

OLD AGE, HIS MARK!
Oliver Wendell Holmes, in the charming discourses of "The Professor at the Breakfast Table" refers to an unmistakable sign of old age. It is three parallel lines between the brows. We can detect the first traces of disease by signs just as plain.

When a woman suffers from backache, nervous depression, dragging-down pains, and those ailments peculiar to women, it is plain that she needs a woman's medicine. What other medicine could she more wisely resort to than Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, which for half a century has proved the natural restorative for these troubles?

THE MERRY THANKSGIVING OF THE BURGLAR AND PLUMBER

By Octave Thanet

Miss Elmer Merryweather went to bed Thanksgiving evening in a graceless frame of mind that may pass for graceless in a woman of her kind. She was a woman of the kind that you may go, I suppose, she said to her faithful maid, and you, Harriet (the maid was the cook) and Matilda (Matilda was the waitress) may go to that party at James' (James was the gardener). I shall not need any of you.

I hate to leave you alone, Miss Elmer said. Robbins and hesitated. Robbins knew when her mistress used this tone that argument would be vain, so she discomfited, and with more than one wistful glance backward in the hall, she retired.

Miss Merryweather began to walk up and down the room. It was an attractive room with the set ivory, cream of the paint, and the sprightly, old-fashioned flowers on the creamy walls. These walls were thickly hung with water-color sketches, and pen and ink and wash drawings which gave one an eerie sensation of familiarity, like faces seen in a dream, and some times, by some clever people, of favorite memories, were traced by famous artists, their original drawings for well-known magazines.

One porch also an old-fashioned air due to the presence of certain chairs and tables, luxuriantly carved in dull-hued oak, or tinted in old mahogany. In one corner of the room a cabinet showed all the dazzling hues of rare old china, the sumptuous silks of Satsuma, the delicate forms of old Sevres, the solid opulence of color and shape of the great English makers. A davenport in one corner, a lounge with many pillows, in another, and a tea-table with its shining equipage, hinted the room to be Miss Merryweather's own special sitting room. She never called it a boudoir, and nothing made her more indignant than to hear the name from anyone else.

"To look like a woman who would have a boudoir," she had been known to demand, almost with fierceness. "A boudoir is a place where you sit with slippers and read poetry and write notes on scented paper, and make poor tea that they sip with spooned spoons. Look at it, isn't that they are truly apostles!" In another, she was a woman of the kind that you may go, I suppose, she said to her faithful maid, and you, Harriet (the maid was the cook) and Matilda (Matilda was the waitress) may go to that party at James' (James was the gardener). I shall not need any of you.

How About Your Stomach?

croquette and salad for lunch. On top of this a soda confection is apt to add to the indigestion. It is a good rule to follow each meal with a Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablet to avoid dyspeptic results due to eating and drinking. Should the stomach sour with water-brash, biliousness, and the regular gasiness due to indigestion these tablets bring relief because they supply the alkaline effect in the stomach and thus offset the acidity of the dyspeptic condition.

It is well to know that you do not deny yourself the pleasures of the good things to eat and drink through fear of indigestion. You will find Stuart's Dyspepsia Tablets on sale in all drug stores at 60 cents a box.

I can see you," said Miss Merryweather. All the while she was hastily donning a wrapper and slippers. Then she turned on the light. The burglar stood directly under the blaze. He did not look like a burglar. There was nothing much to his pale face except the look of keen sickness and hopelessness. His clothes were like any workman's, a pair of blue soiled overalls with something like a bib front and a patched check shirt. His hat was a hat and not a cap in which artists for reasons known to themselves delight in making a burglar wear a very light-colored hat, and it was not pulled down over his black brows. It was pushed back from dark brown locks. He looked like a workman out of a job. His hands, one of which held a pistol, were calloused and stained, a workman's hands.

When Miss Merryweather looked upon him—one may say stared, since that was the effect of the springing of his empty hand to his hat.

"I don't want to disturb you, ma'am," he repeated, but I've got to have some money."

"Why?" said Miss Merryweather. She was quite a bit of a girl and had taken a rocking chair.

"Why?" the man echoed bitterly. "Because I prefer to steal to see my wife dying for want of things done for her and my children without shoes on their feet, and never a bite of food, as all this day, by—! I beg your pardon, lady; I wasn't meaning to swear, but I'm worn out!"

"Haven't you had anything to eat today?" said Miss Merryweather. He shook his head. A stiff lock of brown hair which stood up on the top of his head waggled at the motion. It gave him a grotesque look. He certainly was frightful yihin.

"Humph," said Miss Merryweather. "You sit down in that rocking chair and stay there until I come up again. Don't you burgle any until I come back; then we'll see what we can do."

"You ain't going to telephone to the police to nab me?"

Miss Merryweather waved her hand toward the wall at a telephone. "It isn't customary in houses of people who are not millionaires to have two telephones," she said. "I am going to bring you something to eat."

"I won't touch a thing, lady," promised the burglar. "I've been druv to this, I turrly have."

Miss Merryweather encouraged him by nod, and departed, lighted candle in hand.

Never it seemed to her, had she heard so many sinister noises as pricked her ears while her candle flitted from pantry to sideboard. Boards creaked under her tread as they never creaked in the daytime, and every door she touched sent up a long shriek of remonstrance.

But Diogenes slept calmly in the laundry. Miss Merryweather shook her head. She carried a revolver in her hand which she laid on the tray. "He seems like a decent sort of submerged unfortunate—thus ran her meditations while she provided the tray—but he may be wicked, and run after me downstairs. If he does, Di and the gun will have to hurt him."

He was leaning back in his chair, his pistol still in one limp hand, his head laid back, showing his miserably thin neck; and the white glare full on the haggard pallor of his face.

His eye brightened at the sight of the tray. Miss Merryweather, making no comment, lighted the lamp under the silver chafing dish; and, as it burned, she buttered the slices of bread and placed beef between them.

"I am afraid the beef is a little underdone for your taste," observed she kindly, "and I hope you don't care for mustard, for I forgot it; but I've put on salt and pepper, and they were the best done pieces I could find. The soup will be warm in a minute. Now, you drink this glass of wine."

The man drank it, keeping his eyes on her. Then he laid the pistol on the table. "I ain't going to use it," he said.

"Which better not," returned Miss Merryweather. "The truth is, I have long had a curiosity to see a burglar, and I rather have planned things that way; but I didn't expect he would be so decent as you seem. How do you like that wine? It's old Jacques port."

The burglar looked rather bewildered, but answered that it was the best wine he had ever tasted. He added, ingenuously, that he had "not tasted much wine."

"You are not at all like a professional burglar," remarked the lady, who had now come to ladling out the steaming soup; "I think you must be an amateur."

"I never touched a thing that wasn't my own before, lady, so help me—!"

"Well, you haven't touched anything YET, now," interrupted Miss Merryweather, who had a media for accuracy. She continued: "I suppose you are putting that sandwich into your pocket for your family—don't do it! I'll make you up a basket for them. Tell me what has brought you, such a decent man, to this pass?"

The man smeared his eyes with his hand before he began. "I never seen a lady like you," he said; "I'm just going to tell you the honest

QUEEN MARIE AND (BELOW) HER DAUGHTER, PRINCESS ILEANA.

(By Milton Bronner)
London, Nov. 22—Some time in December America may be visited by one of the most beautiful women in Europe—Queen Marie Alexandra Victoria of Rumania.

In story books for children and in the royalty-loving newspapers of Europe, queens are always beautiful, whereas in fact most of them I have seen over here are very plain persons with some very dowdy clothes.

But Queen Marie isn't in that category. She is really good to look upon. In fact it is a sort of traditional piece of luck for Rumania that most of the queens of that country and most of the princesses are very pretty.

Cousin of King George
The late king's consort, famous in literature as "Carmen Sylva," was a good looking woman. The present queen is the beauty of the royal family of England. She is an English princess. Her father was Duke of Edinburgh, so that she is a granddaughter of Queen Victoria, a niece of King Edward and a cousin of King George. She was born in 1875 and married when she was 18.

Fair-haired with blue gray eyes and truth, I was working in Chicago. I belonged to the junior plumbers—

"On, if you were a plumber, it must have come natural to you to rob."

The burglar acknowledged the sally by a faint smile. "We ain't so bad as they make us out. Well, hard times came and work fell off, and the union wouldn't let us work below wages, so I left the union, fact is I couldn't keep up my dues."

"Do you mean to tell me," cried Miss Merryweather, springing from her chair in strong agitation—"do you mean to tell me you are not a union man? Don't think of burgling me! I can give you a great deal better job, and I will advance you money on it, too. This house is only about half plumbed; if you will take hold and get this plumbing done by six o'clock tomorrow, I'll pay you well! And you shall have two men to help you who aren't plumbers, but have some sense. And a boy to run to the shop to get the tools. Are you a good plumber?"

"Yes'm, I was; but, you see, I went to Pullman and worked there till the strike came. I didn't strike, so as to get the relief. The strike lasted so long I used up all my savings; and then I didn't get back after all. So I'm little out of practice. But I guess I can satisfy you I'll try hard."

"You shall have a chance, anyhow. So you went to Pullman, and why didn't you get back there when the strike ended?"

"They didn't take all the men ma'am; and I heard of a job in Chicago, so I moved there; and I got it, sure enough, but it only lasted a little while; and then I wrote to the new factory they was starting here, the glucose works, and I got a job, but the first week I come down with typhoid fever, and I worked with the fever on me, and I did take whiskey to kinder hold me up for I was wild to think of losing my job; but I wasn't drunk, though somebody said so. So I lost it, another feller got it—well, I guess he needed it bad, too. But that was how it was. I went home and was sick awful bad for six weeks, and when I got up again there was nothing I could get, and the baby come just then. God forgive it! And I guess he knowed he was none too welcome. Doctor says he needs some kinder food. Nestling food or some such name, and I want him to get it for I somehow don't just want him to die. If he is mean! Then I wanted to get my woman things, she's an awful nice woman, I'll say that, and about all we've got she's earned washing. I have been out a week walking about a hundred miles, I guess, looking for a job everywhere. I heard jobs were to be had, but you see we were strangled, and there ain't enough work to go round 'mong the old men. Today, as I went back from the shoe factory 'cross the river, and seen all the turkeys in the windows, and remembered how there wasn't a bite in our house for today nor

"They shall have a latch-key, every one of them; of course you got in. But didn't you wake the dog?"

"No, ma'am; he slept just like the dead. Then big dogs is just like men about sleeping, they sleep so sound."

"But when you came up the stairs what did you do about the mat at the foot of the stairs? The lights ought to have sprung up and the bells rung, the instant your foot touched the mat!"

"Why, you see, lady," said the burglar apologetically—he seemed to fear lest she should be hurt by the failure of her carefully planned burglar traps—"you see, I naturally struck a match now and then, to see my way, and when I come on that plain common mat in that beautiful hall with the handsome rugs about, I knowed it to be a burglar mat, so I just stepped over it. I've no doubt all the things would have happened if I had stepped on it right."

"I don't know," said Miss Merryweather, gloomily; "maybe the plumbers got it out of order. But, come here, open that chest!" She pointed to the nud's chest against the wall, and the burglar obediently laid his pistol down to do her bidding. An inner chest of iron was disclosed, having two projecting handles.

"Lift the cover," commanded Miss Merryweather.

A smile of grim expectation parted her firm lips; now approached her triumph. The burglar laid his hands on the knobs and pensively nodded his head, screwing up his mouth like a man recognizing a familiar flavor. "Yes'm," said he; "galvanic battery, ain't it? Kinder prickly!"

"I'll weaken the current," said Miss Merryweather; "you must be a perfect Spartan not to call out."

"Well, you see, I rather suspected it was," the burglar replied, letting his hands drop.

"How can you get your hands away?" cried Miss Merryweather. "Hain't you weakened the current?" deprecated the burglar. "Pshaw, I thought you had, or I wouldn't a taken them down. I'm real sorry."

Miss Merryweather laughed. "Everything is a failure," said she. "You ought to be held a prisoner, with your shoulders hunched up. It's all wrong."

"Oh, no, it ain't, ma'am," the burglar tried to reassure her. "I ain't no manner of doubt that them mats downstairs would work splendid; we in try going down. But these here galvanic batteries are mighty unreliable. Never mind, I kin fix it all right for you. I'm glad I came, though."

"So am I," said Miss Merryweather. "Do you think something is the matter with this, too?" displaying her revolver.

It was a big revolver of glossy, iridescent black, not a feminine frippery about it—no pearl, no silver; a revolver that meant business and showed its intentions, honorably.

"No, it's all right," said the burglar, admiringly, "you could a plugged me, sure."

"Unless you shot me first," "Humph, that would a been difficult, see? Mine ain't loaded and there's something the matter with the trigger so it can't go off, else it would a' been in the pawnshop 'stead of here."

"Well," sighed Miss Merryweather, "it's a mercy you tried to burgle me with that useless thing, instead of someone else. Now, for goodness sake come downstairs and let me give you that basket and get you off before the servants come."

Miss Merryweather had very much the sensations of a burglar in her own house, as she despoiled the larder, the friendly burglar holding the candle. They hurried at every glimpse of the clock, they trembled at all the creakings of the floor.

"Robbins never did stay out before later than twelve or one; it's a quar—Great heavens!" Miss Merryweather jumped. Suddenly she was bathed in a flood of light, and bells seemed to be ringing all over the house.

"I guess the mats is straight goods," said the burglar; you trod on it by mistake, ma'am. Say, what's that? They're hollering in the yard. I'll try this door—"

"No, you will not," said Miss Merryweather, all herself again: "You will stay where you are, while I open the door."

She was at the hall door before she ended, calling loudly to the shrieking maids, who came in timidly (except Robbins) in the rear of two men, who were none too valorous.

"Nothing is the matter," said Miss Merryweather; "stepped on the mat myself. It works perfectly. Harriet, I've engaged a plumber, and he is to work all night, and the plumbing will be done by tomorrow afternoon. If you need those extra tools, you better go home and get them now—turning upon the bewildered burglar—"and you don't need that candle any more, put it down. Don't forget the basket."

"No, ma'am, thank you, ma'am," the burglar responded meekly, "and I'll be back—"

"As soon as you can; there's no time to lose," said Miss Merryweather. "He is a good plumber," she announced calmly to her dazed domestic staff, "and I was lucky to get him. I have sent a basket of things to his family. Get him a good breakfast tomorrow morning, and I hope we shall have a Thanksgiving after all. I hain't forget how good you all are in these emergencies."

The household knew too well Miss Merryweather's generosity, for these special efforts, to be unhappy; but Robbins summed up the general mixture of disapprobation and admiration. She said: "Did you ever see the like! I believe Miss Elmer would get her will if she had to tear the world up by the roots!"

The plumbing was done, and well done, by four of the next afternoon. The burglar's family, as the Merryweather gathering, dined late that Thanksgiving.

I cannot find any good moral in this tale unless it be contained in Miss Merryweather's own subsequent reflections. "Now, aren't the ways of providence queer? Herc's my burglar got a good plumber shop and lots of custom, simply by an unsuccessful attempt to rob. But then, it is a merciful thing that, as our best intentions are liable to bring harm and misfortune, so our bad ones run off the track sometimes, too. And, anyhow, it wasn't because he was a burglar he was so lucky, but because he was such a remarkably gentle and propitiating burglar! If he hadn't been, I should have had to shoot him or 'sle' Diogenes on him. I hope it will be a lesson to us both that it is far better to rule by love than fear, and kind words can never die, and all that kind of thing! And certainly a mercy to me that I feel truly thankful for. I don't know how I could have beaten the plumbers without him!"

COLDS

"Pape's Cold Compound" is Quickest Relief Known
